Editorial – Journal relaunch

The Australian and New Zealand Maritime Law Journal serves as a transparent open-access forum for the presentation, scrutiny and discussion of the maritime law of relevance to Australia and New Zealand. It serves as an archive of knowledge and reflects the developments in the law over time. It serves these goals by seeking to link the rigour of the academy with the practice of maritime law.

As in all things, 2021 is an appropriate time to reinvigorate the journal and renew the link between academia and practice. To this end, a new Editorial board has been established that reflects the symbiosis between law and practice. The Journal has also undergone a refit – moving to a new platform, with a new design and presentation, and a new inter-connectivity with searchable databases and platforms such as google scholar. It includes an expanded Current Developments section that provides an outlet for more practice orientated analysis and discussion. The new Journal houses the Journal (and past Journal archives) as well as the archive of MLAANZ conference papers beginning with the first conference of full papers held in 1976.

The Journal is an open-access journal produced and supported by the Marine and Shipping Law Unit in the Law School at the University of Queensland, with the financial support of MLAANZ for the appointment of the student editor.
